

Amazing facts about the kings of Israel & Judah that you probably didn't notice
Matthew 10:34

Let's start with one that is relatively simple to understand but easy to miss. It requires putting together several details from 2Ki 15 & 18. The following chart is an excerpt from a larger chart that is drawn to scale such that 1 year = 0.1 inches.

Notice anything unusual? Hezekiah is age 25 when he begins to reign in the 8th year of his father Ahaz, who was 28 at that time, making Ahaz just 3 years older than his son Hezekiah. So, Ahaz was 3 years old when his son Hezekiah was born.

How was Ahaziah both age 22 & age 42 when he began to reign and how did he begin to reign in both the 11th and the 12th year of Jehoram king of Israel?

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Kings 8:25-26 <sup>25</sup> In the twelfth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel did Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah begin to reign. <sup>26</sup> Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri king of Israel.                                                                                                      |
| 2 Chronicles 22:1-2 (2Ch 21:12-20) <sup>1</sup> And the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned. <sup>2</sup> Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Athaliah the daughter of Omri. |

This next one can be fairly simple. If you don't believe God (Psa 12:6,7) then you can write it off as a scribal mistake and believe the lie that only the original manuscripts were free from error. However, if you do believe God when He promised to preserve His word from this generation for ever, then it is also relatively simple because a man cannot normally be two different ages at the same time.

So, immediately we know that we aren't dealing with one man: instead there are two different men with the same name. We could stop there but if we did we would miss out on all the juicy details and there are quite a few; however, this endeavour is not for the feint of heart. It requires putting together quite a bit of information from quite a few verses all while keeping track of more than a few conditions that need to be met to completely agree with scripture. And while we have assembled them all together in a nice little chart you should still review all of the relevant verses very carefully for yourself (Acts 17:11). It is a lot to take in so don't expect to finish this one in 10 minutes or even 1 day. The chart takes up an entire page by itself, so let's go over some important details in the mean time.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Chronicles 18:1-2 <sup>1</sup> Now Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance, and joined affinity with Ahab. <sup>2</sup> And after certain years he went down to Ahab to Samaria. And Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead. |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

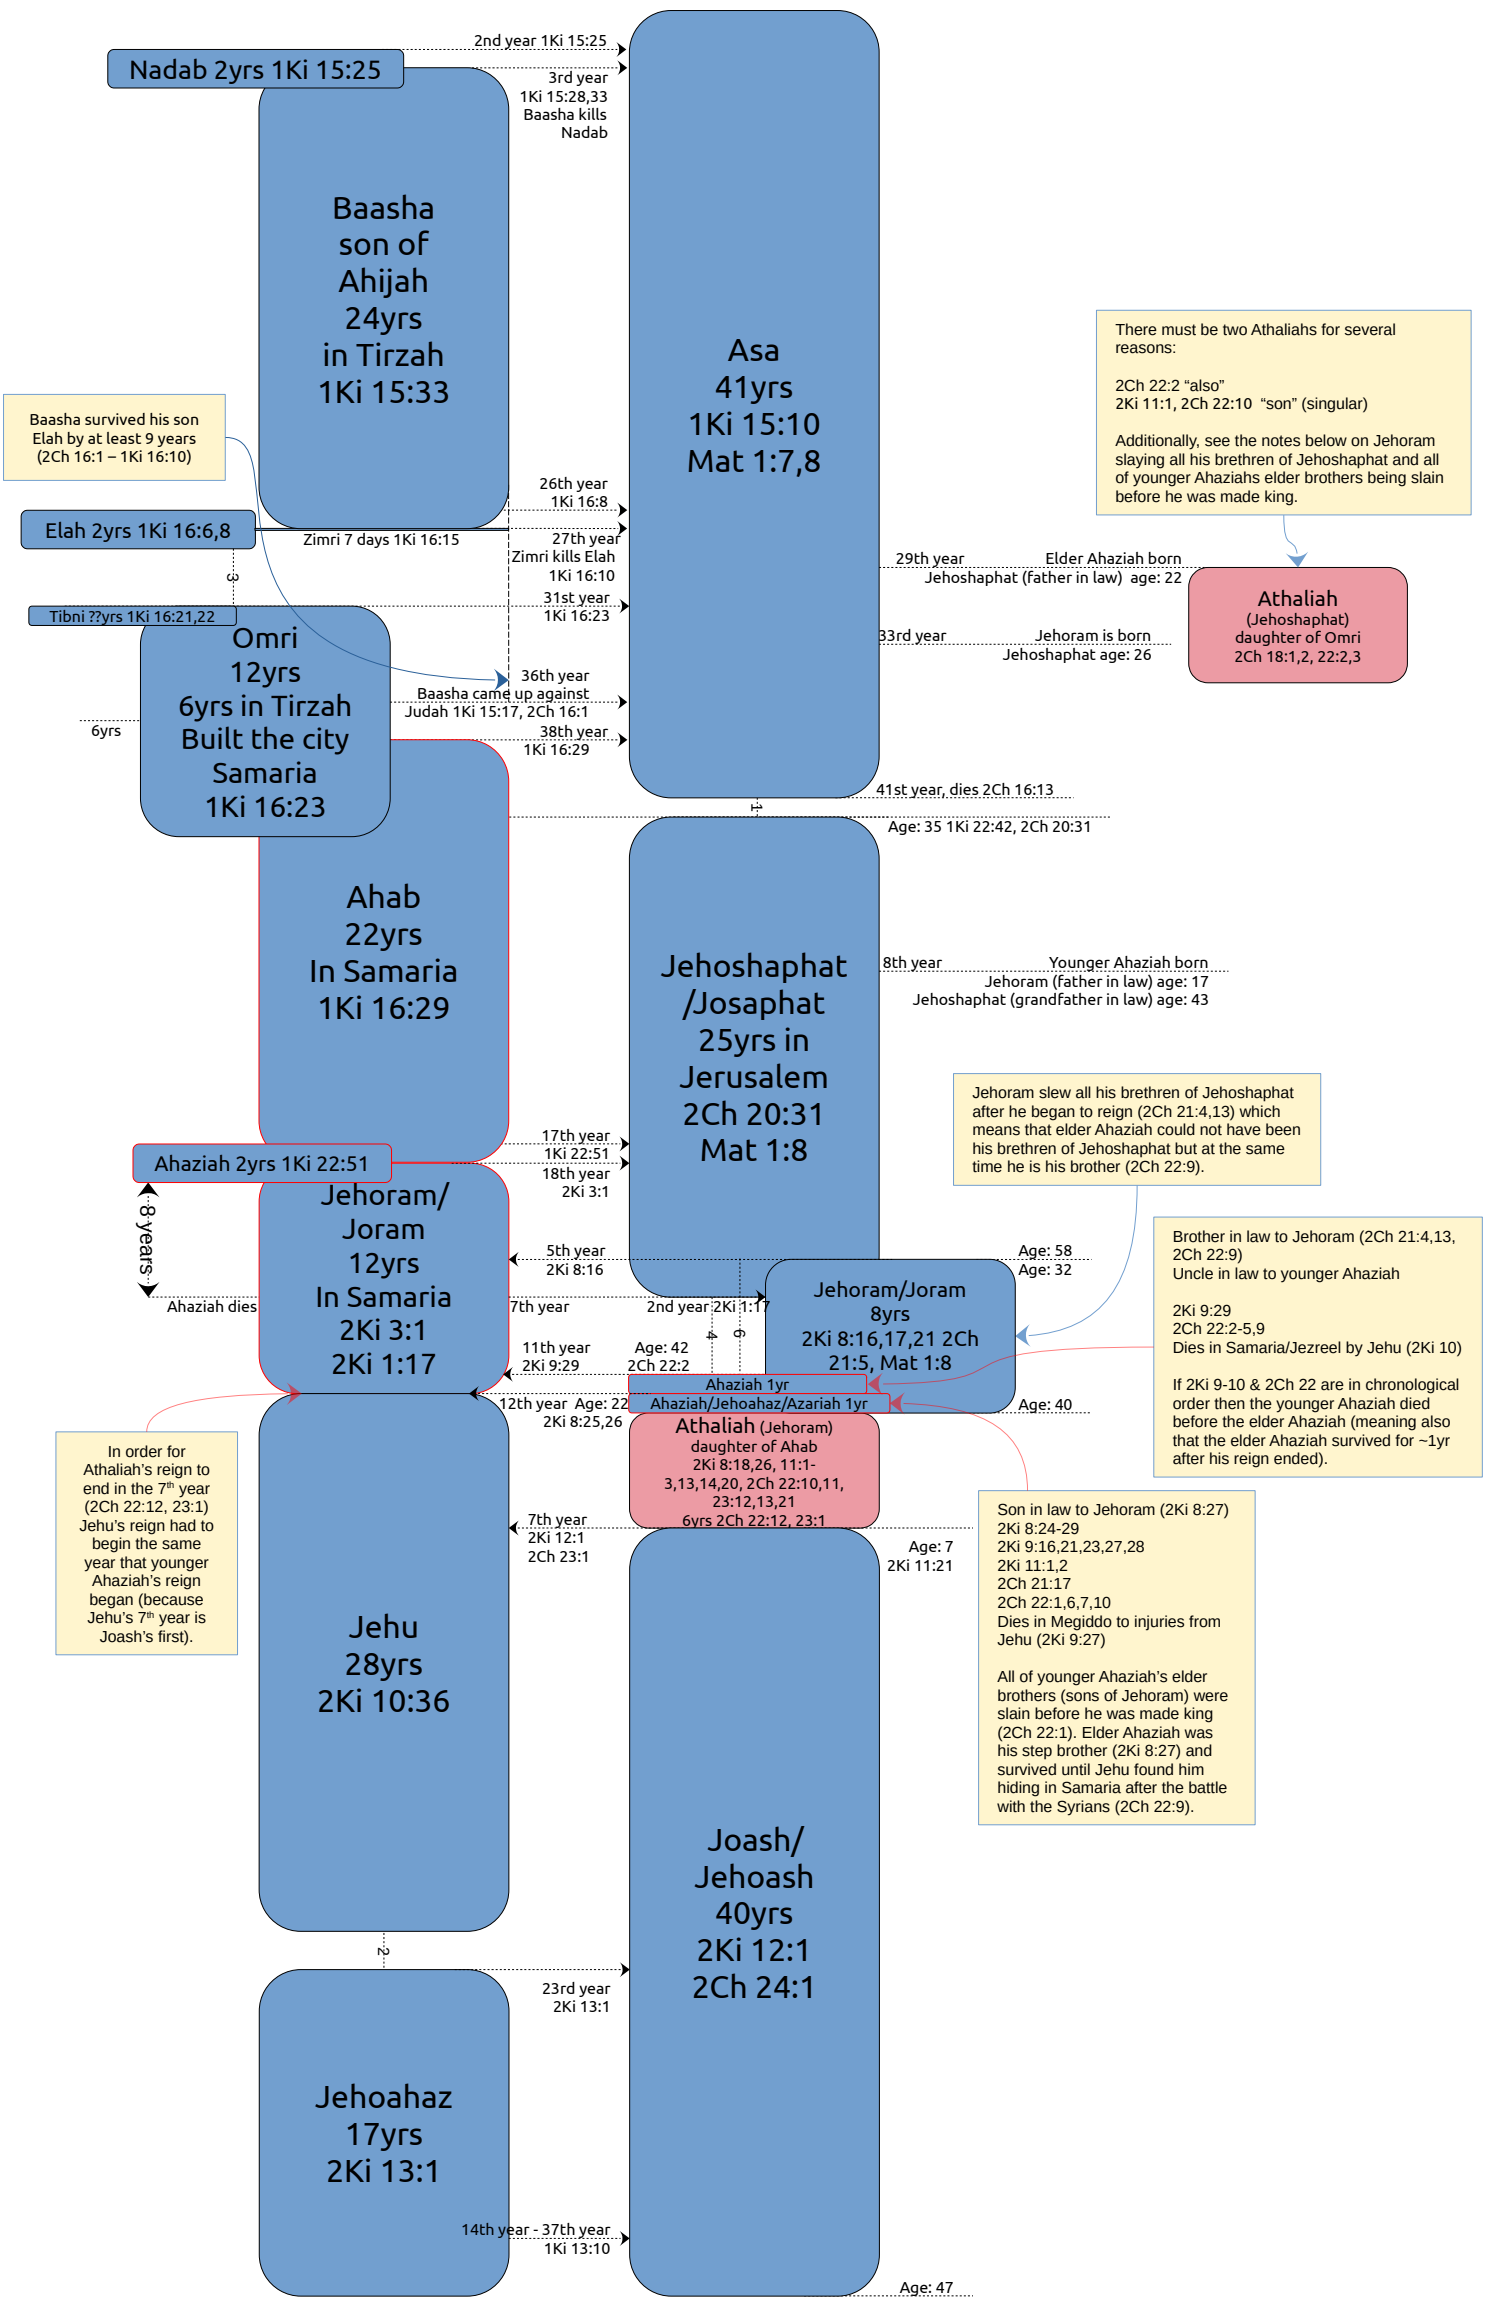

- The word “affinity” occurs three times in the Bible and it's meaning is quite easy to ascertain simply from the context of each time that it is used (1Ki 3:1, 2Ch 18:1, Ezr 9:14).
  - And that meaning is simply “marriage” or “alliance through marriage” as we see in 2Ch 18:1.
- Take note also that in verse 2, Ahab provides for a large feast for the event.
- And then the natural question arises, who among Ahab's house could Jehoshaphat have married?
  - If you weren't already aware, Ahab is a son of Omri king of Israel.

|                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Kings 11:1 And when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal.                             |
| 2 Chronicles 22:10 But when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah. |

- Twice we are told that (queen) Athaliah saw that her (singular) son was dead. Why not plural? You'll find out more about that later but for now just know that this is a crucial detail.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Kings 9:27-29 <sup>27</sup> But when Ahaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the garden house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite him also in the chariot. And they did so at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam. And he fled to Megiddo, and died there. <sup>28</sup> And his servants carried him in a chariot to Jerusalem, and buried him in his sepulchre with his fathers in the city of David. <sup>29</sup> And in the eleventh year of Joram the son of Ahab began Ahaziah to reign over Judah. |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

- Right after Ahaziah dies in Megiddo (which is another important detail) we are told that Ahaziah began to reign in the 11th year of Joram the son of Ahab (king of Israel).
  - But, I thought he just died? It's not unusual for the Bible to not be written in chronological order by itself; but, 2Ki 8:25 tells us that Ahaziah began to reign in the 12th year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel.
- Now this is something we can work with. We have two different men, they began to reign at two different ages, at two different times, and they died two different ways (2Ki 9:27, 2Ch 22:9).

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Chronicles 21:1-2 <sup>1</sup> Now Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David. And Jehoram his son reigned in his stead. <sup>2</sup> And he had brethren the sons of Jehoshaphat, Azariah, and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephatiah: all these were the sons of Jehoshaphat king of Israel.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| 2 Chronicles 21:4 Now when Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of his father [Jehoshaphat], he strengthened himself, and slew all his brethren with the sword, and divers also of the princes of Israel.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| 2 Chronicles 21:13 But hast walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go a whoring, like to the whoredoms of the house of Ahab, and also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• One of the many conditions that must be met is that Jehoram king of Judah killed all of his brethren of his father's house (Jehoshaphat) sometime after his reign began. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• One Ahaziah began to reign in the 6th year of Jehoram king of Judah and the other began to reign one year later. Jehoram's reign was only 8 years long.</li> </ul> </li> <li>• And because of that we know that very likely neither Ahaziah can be Jehoram's brethren of Jehoshaphat (but one of them is the brother of Jehoram 2Ch 22:9).</li> <li>• We know that both Ahaziah's (that were kings of Judah) died at the hand of Jehu (2Ki 9, 2Ch 22).</li> </ul> |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Chronicles 21:16-17 <sup>16</sup> Moreover the LORD stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians: <sup>17</sup> And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons.                       |
| 2 Chronicles 22:1 And the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• One of the Ahaziah's is Jehoram's only surviving, youngest son (who is also known as Jehoahaz).</li> <li>• So, where did the other Ahaziah come from?</li> </ul> |

One crucial detail that is really hard to notice without calculating their ages and reign lengths is that one of the Ahaziah's (the one that we'll refer to as "the elder Ahaziah" because he was 11 years older than the younger Ahaziah) is 6 years older than Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat. And because of that we know that the elder Ahaziah can not be the birth son of Jehoram king of Judah. Another way to discern between the two Ahaziah's is that the elder Ahaziah is never called Ahaziah son of Jehoram but he is called the son of Jehoshaphat (2Ch 22:9).

Now, included in all the verses that need to be reviewed on the chart, there is another detail that I want to point out: remember earlier when we saw that (queen) Athaliah referred to her (singular) son? That hints to us that only one of the Ahaziah's was the son of Athaliah, otherwise it might have been written "her sons". So, what then about the following verses that tell us that both Ahaziah's were the sons of Athaliah?

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Kings 8:18,26 <sup>18</sup> And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, as did the house of Ahab: for the daughter of Ahab was his wife: and he did evil in the sight of the LORD. <sup>26</sup> Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri king of Israel.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| 2 Chronicles 22:2-3 <sup>2</sup> Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Athaliah the daughter of Omri. <sup>3</sup> He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Take notice to the words "also" in 2Ch 22:2,3. Those verses are clearly referring to the elder Ahaziah and they tell us that "his mother's name also was Athaliah".</li> <li>• Only one Athaliah is referred to as the daughter of Ahab. The other Athaliah is only ever called "the daughter of Omri" (Ahab's father).</li> <li>• And so it becomes not too far fetched to guess that the second Athaliah was the aunt of the Athaliah who would become queen of Judah for a short time (because she could have been the sister to Ahab).</li> </ul> |

Want to take a wild guess who was the husband of this second Athaliah? Keep in mind that the elder Ahaziah is referred to as the “son of Jehoshaphat” (2Ch 22:9).

Remember the large feast that Ahab held for Jehoshaphat that seems very likely was a marriage feast in 2Ch 18:1-2?

Remember God’s promise(s) to David in 2Sa 7 & 1Ch 17?

Special note: a co-regency does not equate to reigning on the throne of David and both Ahaziah’s reigned co-regent with Jehoram. You’ll have to study about the two Jehoiachims (below, after this one) to see that. In the 4th year of Eliakim/Jehoiakim’s reign God declared that [Jehoiakim] “shall have none to sit upon the throne of David” (both of his sons named Jehoiachin reigned co-regent with Jehoiakim).

While the Bible does not explicitly tell us that Jehoshaphat married the other Athaliah when we put all the pieces together that we are given - what other possibilities exist?

Here’s what we have:

- 2 Ahaziahs
  - The elder is called a son of Jehoshaphat (2Ch 22:9).
    - Jehoram slew all his brethren of Jehoshaphat (2Ch 21:4,13) so this Ahaziah had to be a brother in law.
  - The younger is called the son of Jehoram (2Ki 8:25).
    - We’re explicitly told that he was a son in law to Jehoram (2Ki 8:27).
    - All of younger Ahaziah’s elder brothers of Jehoram were slain before he was made king (21:17, 22:1) confirming that he is a son in law to Jehoram.
- 2 Athaliahs
  - One is the mother of the elder Ahaziah (she did not become queen that we know of).
    - She is called the daughter of Omri.
  - One is the mother of the younger Ahaziah and was queen for ~6 years.
    - She is called the daughter of Ahab.

From what I can tell, in order for all of these to be true, Jehoshaphat would have to have been married to the “other” Athaliah (likely elder; the one that was not queen that we know of). If you can think of any other possibilities let me know please!

How was Jehoiachin both age 8 and age 18 when he began to reign?

2 Kings 24:6,8

<sup>6</sup> So Jehoiakim slept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

<sup>8</sup> Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Nehushta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem.

2 Chronicles 36:8,9

<sup>8</sup> Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

<sup>9</sup> Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

- Normally it's not possible for a man to be two different ages when he began to reign so immediately we know that these verses are not both about one man but are instead about two different men with the same name.
- Another clue that God gave us that there are two different men with the same name is in the length of their reigns.
  - One either lasted 10 days longer than the other or was made king 10 days before the other.

Jeremiah 36:29-30

<sup>29</sup> And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast burned this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

<sup>30</sup> Therefore thus saith the LORD of Jehoiakim king of Judah; He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.

- In the 4th year of Jehoiakim king of Judah's reign he receives a letter from the prophet Jeremiah.
- After throwing the letter into a fire, God pronounces a judgment against Jehoiakim that none of his seed will sit upon the throne of David.
- Now that presents an interesting scenario because we were told in 2Ki 24:6 and 2Ch 36:8 that both Jehoiachin's reigned in their father's stead.
  - Additionally, in 2Ki 24:12,15, 25:27, Jer 52:31, and Eze 1:2 a Jehoiachin is referred to as the king of Judah.
- So then moving forward we need to think about scenarios where both are true.
- First, we need to know that when the Bible says "such-and-such reigned in such-and-such's stead" it does not necessarily mean that one king followed successively right after another. You may need to pause here to go and learn that for yourself before you continue because it's crucial for understanding how both Jehoiachin's were kings but they also did not sit on the throne of David.
  - This can most easily be seen by charting the reigns of all the kings of Judah & Israel and lining them up relative to each other and comparing that to when we see the phrase "such-and-such reigned in such-and-such's stead".
  - Note that this and many other details are very easy to miss by just reading along. Here are a few examples.
    - 8 years of co-regency between Ahaz & Hezekiah kings of Judah.
    - 13 year gap between Amaziah and Azariah/Uzziah kings of Judah.
    - Omri king of Israel was made king by the people before Zimri died which was ~4 years before his reign actually began (1Ki 16:16, 1Ki 16:23).
- Another possible scenario is that both Jehoiachins were not Jehoiakim's birth sons (much like Ahaz and Hezekiah) but I haven't found any scripture to support that scenario.

2 Kings 24:6

So Jehoiakim slept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

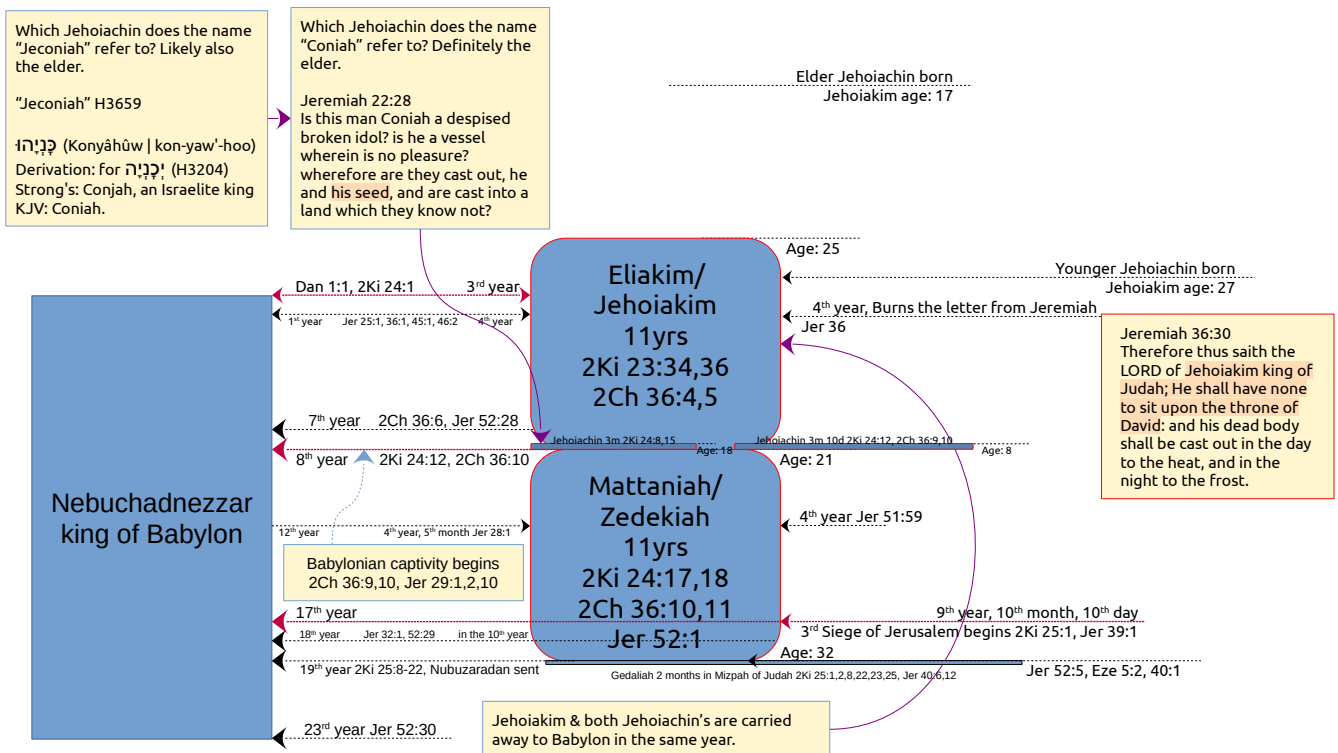

2 Chronicles 36:5-6

<sup>5</sup> Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God.

<sup>6</sup> Against him came up Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and bound him in fetters, to carry him to Babylon.

- If all we do is look at 2 Kings, we might think that Jehoiakim died and then one of his sons reigned immediately after him which disagrees with what Jer 36:30 tells us.
- When we look at 2 Chronicles, we learn that before dying Jehoiakim was carried to Babylon.

A to-scale chart of the reigns of Johoiakim & both Jehoiachins

When we put together all the details that we are given in a way that agrees with all of scripture a fuller picture emerges of the events surrounding the 2nd siege of Jerusalem. We know that neither the people or God made either Jehoiachin king. So what we see is that near the end of the last year of his reign, Jehoiakim, when he saw (or heard of) his end swiftly approaching, attempted to secure the throne for his family by naming two of his sons king. Since the younger Jehoiachin's reign was 10 days longer than the elder, he was either made king 10 days before his older brother or his reign ended 10 days after his older brother. If 2Ki 24:10-17 is written chronologically then the younger was taken before the elder which leans towards the younger being made king 10 days before his older brother.

Jeremiah 52:31
And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the five and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the first year of his reign lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah, and brought him forth out of prison,

2 Kings 25:27
And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the year that he began to reign did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison;

- As an added bonus these two verses that at first glance seem to indicate that the same man was taken out of prison on two different days now make perfect sense.
- And that begs the question: which one was released from prison first?

Jeremiah 22:24
As I live, saith the LORD, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence;

Jeremiah 24:1
The LORD shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the LORD, after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

- We already know that there are two Jehoiachin's that are both the sons of Jehoiakim and elsewhere in the Bible we see the names "Jeconiah" and "Coniah" being used to seemingly refer to a Jehoiachin son of Jehoiakim king of Judah.
- So, which one is Coniah and which one is Jeconiah? Or are they both names for only one of the Jehoiachins?

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 2 Kings 24:8-9 <sup>8</sup> ¶ Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Nehushta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem. <sup>9</sup> And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father had done.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | The elder Jehoiachin was 10 years older than his younger brother and his mother's name is Nehushta.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| 2 Kings 24:10-14 <sup>10</sup> ¶ At that time the servants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against Jerusalem, and the city was besieged. <sup>11</sup> And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came against the city, and his servants did besiege it. <sup>12</sup> And Jehoiachin the king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon, he, and his mother, and his servants, and his princes, and his officers: and the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign. <sup>13</sup> And he carried out thence all the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the LORD, as the LORD had said. <sup>14</sup> And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths: none remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land. | 2 Chronicles 36:8-10 <sup>8</sup> Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead. <sup>9</sup> ¶ Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD. <sup>10</sup> And when the year was expired, king Nebuchadnezzar sent, and brought him to Babylon, with the goodly vessels of the house of the LORD, and made Zedekiah his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem. A new paragraph begins and if we aren't careful we won't notice that the Jehoiachin being referred to switches to the younger right after giving us an overview of the elder. We can know this by comparing who was carried away with each respective Jehoiachin. The younger Jehoiachin had no wife and thus also had no children at age 8 and so his wife or wives are not listed as being taken with him. Each Jehoiachin is carried away with his mother, indicating that they had the same father but different mothers. |
| 2 Kings 24:15-17 <sup>15</sup> And he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, and the king's mother, and the king's wives, and his officers, and the mighty of the land, those carried he into captivity from Jerusalem to Babylon. <sup>16</sup> And all the men of might, even seven thousand, and craftsmen and smiths a thousand, all that were strong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon. <sup>17</sup> ¶ And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his father's brother king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | Jeremiah 22:28 Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not? The elder Jehoiachin was accompanied by his wives (plural) and his seed (singular).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

When we look at the verses where “Coniah” appears we can see that in at least two of them (Jer 22:28,30), before the events of the 2nd siege Jer 22:25, that that name refers to a Jehoiachin that has one child. The siege began when the younger Jehoiachin was 8 years old.

Not only is the younger Jehoiachin not listed as being taken with a wife or wives but we also have no other evidence to suggest that by 8 years old he had any wife or children and this makes a strong case that the name “Coniah” is another name for the elder Jehoiachin.

The name “Jeconiah” is a bit more mysterious. None of the verses that mention that name (1Ch 3:16,17, Est 2:6, Jer 24:1, 27:20, 28:4, 29:2) give us definitive evidence that points to either Jehoiachin. The only evidence that we do have to guess which of the Jehoiachin's it is referring to is in the Strong's number for the Hebrew word כְּנִיָּהוּ (Konyâhûw | kon-yaw'-hoo | Coniah) which is H3659. According to Strongs “Coniah” H3659 is derived from “Jeconiah” H3204.

And the conclusion is that both “Jeconiah” and “Coniah” refer to the elder Jehoiachin.

Building on that, we see that in the entire book of Jeremiah the name “Jehoiachin” shows up only one time. The other names “Jeconiah” and “Coniah” both refer to the elder Jehoiachin and so it seems much more likely that Jer 52:31 refers to the younger Jehoiachin which if true means that the younger Jehoiachin was released from prison 2 days before his elder brother.

Fun facts

- Both the younger and elder Jehoiachin survived until at least ages 45 & 55 respectively (2Ki 25:27, Jer 52:31).
- If he lived long enough, the elder Jehoiachin would have been 88 years old at the end of the captivity, but neither him or his mother returned to Jerusalem (Jer 22:26).
- The beginning of the 70 years of captivity appears to be reckoned from the beginning of the captivity of the elder Jehoiachin (2Ch 36:9,10, Jer 29:1,2,10).
  - Which was during/after the 2nd of three sieges of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.
  - The 3rd and final siege was the one when Jerusalem was destroyed and burned (Eze 33:21 “smitten”).
- In order for Daniel to be in Babylon during the 2nd year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:1) he would have to have been taken in the 1st siege of Jerusalem which occurred during the 3rd year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah.