

Gender Crisis

This one surprised me because evidently there are no extant Greek manuscripts that “fix” this crisis to support the false doctrines that are built on top of it. This means that some “scholars” are forced to make a basic grammar mistake in order to support their interpretations (Job 5:13, 1Co 3:19).

We’ll look at a familiar passage in an unfamiliar way.

Matthew 16:16-20

¹⁶ And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

¹⁷ And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

¹⁸ And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

¹⁹ And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

²⁰ Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

The English grammar is plain enough, provided you aren’t interested in twisting what the Scripture saith. But, let’s have a look at the Greek which strikingly reveals the basic grammatical error of twisting the definition of “this rock”. Evidently, ALL extant Greek manuscripts agree on the following genders for each article and noun so in this case it doesn’t matter which one you use.

English	Greek (TR)	Transliteration	Gender	Explicit Gender Marker
Peter	Πέτρος	Petros	Masculine	-ος (-os)
this	ταύτη	tautē	Feminine	-η (-ē)
the	τῇ	tē	Feminine	-η (-ē)
rock	πέτρα	petra	Feminine	-α (-a)

If you weren’t aware, in Greek grammar both articles and pronouns must agree in gender with the noun that they describe.

Since “rock” and “this” are both feminine, it is impossible for either one to describe “Peter” which is masculine. Greek uses both “this” and “the” together, which is why you sometimes won’t see them both expressed in the English.

And therein lies the gender crisis that is created when anyone equates “this rock” to “Peter”.